CHINESE SCORE MAJOR VICTORY IN SOUTH HONAN

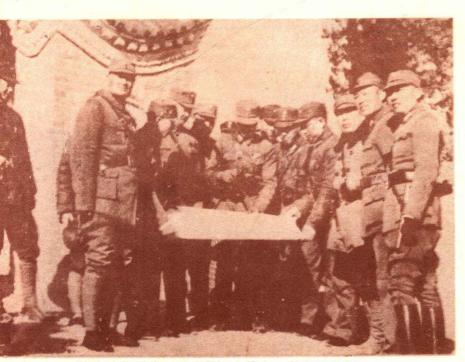

The Japanese Spring Offensive has ended in failure. The aim of the Japanese drive this time was to clear the Peiping-Hankow Railway, a portion of which in South Honan was still in Chinese hands. An army of eighty thousand infantrymen assisted by eight thousand mounted units together with five hundred fifty guns and three hundred tanks and armoured cars launched a general offensive upon the Chinese defenders on the Honan front. The Chinese army retreated at first in order to lure in their enemy as far as Louho and Nanyang and then launched a sudden counter-offensive, completely outflanking the invaders. The Japanese suffered heavily in this engagement and lost many strategical points in Central China.

® NEW BORN TEXTILE INDUSTRY IN FREE CHINA

China has lost most of her cotton mills during the war. According to recent statistical reports from reliable sources, losses in occupied areas alone amounted to 1,854,000 spindles and 19,600 looms. The remaining number of spindles and looms, as compared with the pre-war number is insignificant. There being only 639,000 spindles and 4,600 looms left in operation in the settlement of Shanghai, and 143,000 spindles and a negligible mumber of looms in Free China. Through three years of constructive effort, there is marked increase in the volume of textile industry in Fiee China. Numerous industrial cooperative societies spring up in every village and town while in Chungking, Thailand and Kunming modern cotten mills are being established. But production is still by far from being sufficient to meet with the pressing demand. Much therefore is yet to be done toward making China selfsufficent along this line.

JAPANESE SOUTH-ADVANCE PLANS FOUND IN CRUSHED PLANE OF ADMIRAL OSUMI

Important plans of Japanese South Advance was discovered by the Chinese guerrilla fighters in South China in the crushed plane in which Admiral Baron Mineo Osumi met his death. The plane, requisitioned by the Japanese Navy, carrying Admiral Osumi, Supreme War Councillor of Japan, who had been inspecting the South China front, took off from Canton, on February 5, at noon time heading for Hainan Island. When flying over Chungshan, Kwantung, the plane was brought down by Chinese machine gun fire. The body of the Japanese admiral was soon found by Chinese guerrilla fighters, together with the original copy of the South Advance Programme. The Chinese military authorities taking possession of the plan had it translated and sent to the governments of Britain, America and Dutch Indies. The body of the admiral was buried by the Chinese army near Kan-lun-kwan with full military honors.

BRITAIN STRENGTHENS SINGAPORE DEFENSES

Large numbers of British and and air forces are being sent to Singapore to strengthen the defenses of the island. Sir Robert Brook Popham, Britian's commander-in-chief in the Far East, has recently had interviews with the military authorities of Phillipine Islands and the Dutch Indias for joint defense. Such urgent mesures are evidently taken as an answer to Japan's ambition for south-advance, which becomes more probable since the signing of the Russo-Japan non-aggression pact.

ABYSSINIAN WAR ENDS WITH THE FALL OF ADDIS ABABA

Having passed six years as an exile in England, Haile Selaisse, Emperor of Abyssinia returns to his capital, Addis Ababa in triumph. Following the occupation of Massawa, Asmara and Harrar the British troops made rapid drive toward the capital of Abyssinia. It was in the afternoon of April 6, that Addis Ababa fell into British hands, thus virtually ending the Abyssinian war. Much of the success is to be attributed to the brave Abyssinians who under the command of Emperor Selaisse harassed the Italians in the rear. Pictures on these pages show the activities of the first battalion of the Abyssinian troops led into Abyssinia by Australian officers through a jungle of 200 miles.

FORTRESS FLYING

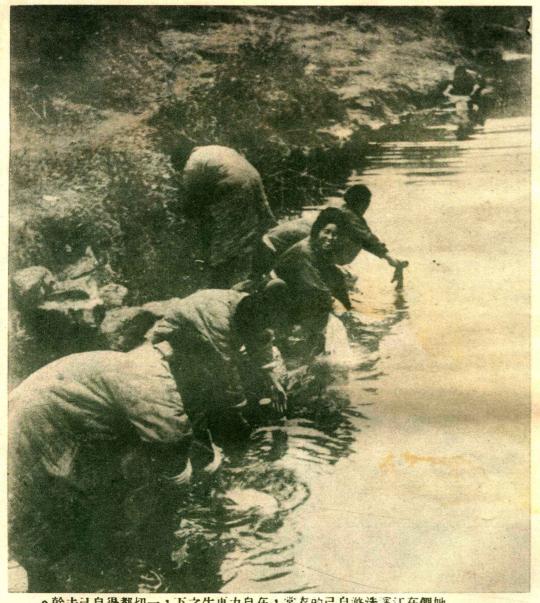

Dr. Currie having returned from his visit to Chungking suggested that twenty Flying fortie ses and a number of fighters from U.S. will enable China to carry out a successful counter-offensive. Since then there has been much speculation here as to what a Flying Fortress is. The "Flying Fortress" is just an aeroplane, but the largest and most powerful aeroplane ever constructed. It is the Dreadnought of the Air with a fuselage length of 132 ft. and ging spread of 210 ft. It carries 11,000 gallons of fuel, travels 200 miles per hour, Its four air-cooled Wright-Duplex-Cyclone motors generates eight thousand horse-powers, enabling the plane to carry a normal crew of ten men and eighteen tons of bombs over a distance of 7,500 miles, in other words it is able to complete two bombing mission from Changtu to Tokyo without making any stop for refuelling. A large number of planes of this type are being built by the famous Douglas Aircraft Company for the U.S. Army and the democratic countries at war.

Three specially selected production crews, consisting of 500 engineers, technicians and mechanics, worked together to turn the world's largest plane imaginable into a reality.
